

SEATTLE, Dec. 2, 2014 /PRNewswire/ -- Seattle Children's Hospital and Research Foundation today launched a $100 million, multi-year fundraising initiative to support research that scientists believe has the ability to cure some types of childhood cancer in the next 5 to 10 years.

Called "Strong Against Cancer" and backed by Seattle Seahawks quarterback Russell Wilson, the initiative will help fund patient access to clinical trials as well as research on immunotherapy, a breakthrough treatment that reprograms the body's T-cells and reintroduces them into the immune system, where they hunt down and destroy cancer cells.

Developed at the Ben Towne Center for Childhood Cancer Research at Seattle Children's, immunotherapy reduces the need for chemotherapy and radiation, along with the harsh side effects that often accompany those treatments. Immunotherapy has shown tremendous progress in the treatment of acute lymphoblastic leukemia in patients who have relapsed one or more times.

"Annually, pediatric cancers receive less than 3% of the National Cancer Institute budget, which is why it's so important for all of us to support initiatives like Strong Against Cancer," Wilson said. "The scientists working on immunotherapy have the treatment and the results to get us to a place where childhood cancer is no worse than a common virus. All that's needed now are the resources to bring it to every kid who needs it."

With help from Wilson, Seattle Children's will create a nationwide network of corporate sponsors and individual donors to fund Strong Against Cancer. The funding will help pediatric cancer patients who qualify for the immunotherapy research trial to be treated at Seattle Children's Hospital, with the goal of bringing the treatment to hospitals across the country.
